4 Elements of Science Fiction

1. The story has elements of science in it (a true combination of science principles or theories [often space and technological advancements] and fiction)

2. The story has strange/unusual settings (imaginary, futuristic, alternate universes, etc.)

3. The story deals with critical aspects of society (events that could possibly happen because of science)
   *this is where you can discuss extrapolation and strange powers

4. The story reflects human nature and society (human beings with human problems and human solutions—all of which happen in a science context)
   *this is where you can discuss protagonist/antagonist
